

REPRESENTATION AT THE OSCARS

In its 90 year history, the Academy Awards has recognized film-making excellence—historically from white men and women. As the population of the United States has changed, the awards have not reflected the diversity of this changing population, and the movement to honour men and women of colour, those of different ability, gender identity, and sexual orientation has grown louder as years have progressed. Here is a look at the most recent 20 years of Oscar nominees and how representation has slowly changed—and needs to continue to improve.
